INDIANAPOLIS, August 1, 1846. ALMANAC FOR THE YEAR 1846.

Indianapolis, August 1, 1846. The Chamber of Peers is arranged like our two Houses of Congress. The seats are semi-circular, bending around a common centre, where the President sits. The members are all dressed up in diplomatic coats, and present to an American the appearance of an assembly of military officers.

SHAVING A NOTE. - Old Skinfint was the most celebrated broker in Philadelphia, his "shaving" operations were famous, as he generally took not only the beard and whiskers, but a pound of flesh in addition. Young Harry S. was one of those dashing chaps who love wine and horses, and who are, Harry, having wants, on various occasions borrowed of Skinfint, at three per cent, a month "off" and having, at sundry periods, made "raises," and paid off his responsibilities, at last he got tired of such constant borrowing and repaying. It would be six years before his estates could be sold under the terms of his father's will, who had prudently postponed that event until he would reach the age of thirty, and Harry concluded it would be better to make a heavy offering at once, and be rid of the bother of continual borrowings. Away to Skinfint he hied, determined to procure a good round sum and be done with it.

At the battle of Fleurus, General Marceau commanding the right wing under Ledebvre, was routed and forced to fall back. In his agony he sent to Gen. Taylor's camp a plea for aid, but he received no answer. He was then surrounded by four battalions, that he might regain his lost position.

"I want ten thousand for six years." "How! what six years?" "Oh, you may have my bond—that will bind my property." "How! what discount will you give?" "My money rate is, always to take the discount 'off'! You know, you owe me a thousand due to-day, and I lent you a 'ten' in the street the other day."
